

PERSUASIVE ESSAY ON SPANKING

Spanking or No Spanking (argumentative essay). joalex7 4 / Apr 20, #1. I am tasked with writing an Argumentative essay 3 pages, doubled spaced ect.

Take for instance the high rate of juvenile delinquency in the United States which seems to rise annually. In closing employees need the options that they need to be made available to them. The opponents, in their argument, fail to consider such extremes which are interestingly prevalent in our current generation. Children learn that they are able to get what they want through the use of fear. A child who is spanked behaves out of fear rather than as a result of his conscience. In conclusion, it is important for the anti-spanking proponents to explore the whole concept of spanking before coming up with their conclusion. Researchers were surprised to find that of those with behavioral problems, 39 percent of all children younger than 2 had been spanked at least once in the previous week. This method of discipline shows children respect by giving them the opportunity to control when and how often they are disciplined as a result of their own actions. Spanking has a well-developed and long-term history. It is against the law for a person to hit another person. Spanking teaches children to operate from fear rather than reason. American Academy of Pediatrics an agency dedicated to the health of all children provides informative article regarding corporal punishment. There are many alternatives to spanking which have proven to be much more effective. When she turned around she saw the older child playfully hit the younger child again and slap the older child in the face. Punishment, even when it appears to work, can produce only superficially good behavior based on fear, which can only take place until the child is old enough to resist. In the United States, California and Massachusetts have laws that ban spanking. While spanking may relieve a parent's frustration and briefly stop misbehavior, according to the American Academy of Pediatrics, researchers suggest that spanking may be the least effective discipline method. Spanking, as a form of discipline, should therefore be administered at an early age and should never be motivated by rage. Well why do you think that is? Spanking can also send the wrong message to children. The concern is not regarding the effectiveness of spanking but the correctness of spanking. The child is refraining from certain behaviors because he or she does not want to be spanked, not because it is wrong. These parents simply cannot handle a situation and take it out on their child. Now police are always patrolling where kids hang out at, and many rights have been taken away from children due to behavior. When children are spanked, feelings of anger and resentment towards their parent prevent them from learning why their actions were wrong. While spanking has some down sides, it should remain legal because making it illegal would be difficult to enforce, and there are already laws against child abuse. The parents didn't recognized that a child of this age gets tired and can't sit in a restaurant setting around 7'O'clock in the evening while adults drink and enjoy the conversation. During the time-out, the child thinks about what he did wrong and should always be combined with an explanation of why the behavior is bad. The main reason that parents use spanking as a discipline technique is because it is what they received when they were children. In these children, the right amount of spanking can be more beneficial for them. A restriction also teaches the child the importance of responsibility and strengthens the parent-child relationship by making the child feel important.